

Audit & Risk

The magazine of the Chartered Institute of Internal Auditors

Media Pack 2016

Why internal auditing matters

All organisations are concerned about managing their risks, people, brands and impacts on the wider world. Put simply, internal audit is the process by which they achieve it. This in turn makes internal auditors some of the most influential people within any organisation.

Normally, heads of internal audit will report directly to the chief financial officer or chief operating officer and the audit committee in their organisation. They are the trusted advisers within, who safeguard performance and identify problems on which the senior management team needs to make decisions.

The institute

- The Chartered Institute of Internal Auditors (Chartered IIA) is the only organisation focused exclusively on internal auditing in the UK and Ireland.
- The institute promotes the importance of internal auditing to the survival and prosperity of any organisation. It serves its members' interests and it challenges organisations to reach the highest standard of corporate governance.
- By providing training courses and seminars, technical guidance, networking opportunities, publications and other services, the Chartered IIA supports and develops members at every stage of their career.

The membership

There are over 9,000 Chartered IIA members in the UK and Ireland, plus another 180,000 worldwide.

In order to become a member, an individual must either be studying for, or have passed, the Certified Internal Auditor (CIA) or the Qualification in Internal Audit Leadership (QIAL). CMIIA indicates a member has achieved Chartered Internal Auditor status. Affiliate memberships is an option for those whom internal audit is part of their role but not the sole focus.

The magazine and the website are very much a stimulus for discussion and knowledge sharing among this community.

All content published under the banner is highly targeted with zero wastage – the only recipients are people for whom internal audit is a key part of their professional capability

We provide a broad platform of engagement for contributors and advertisers to reach this highly targeted and increasingly essential group of professionals in the business community.
